Biography

Associate Professor Chivonne Algeo is an experienced academic and researcher in the field of project management, and has more than 20 years of experience delivering a variety of projects for major financial, insurance, and health organisations. As an Associate Professor with Monash University, Chivonne leads the development and delivery of courses for students and industry to advance their capability for managing projects. Chivonne's international award winning research focuses on acquiring and exchanging project knowledge; individual and group reflection to improve project practice; converting knowledge to make evidence-based decisions; and examining the interactions and roles of change managers and project managers. Her research is published in international journals and books, and is presented at leading research and industry conferences and forums. Chivonne is a member of the Project Management Institute, working on local and international initiatives to promote education and research. She is also a Life Fellow of the Australian Institute of Project Management, and served as Chair of both the Council of Fellows and the Knowledge and Research Council.
